Reflection: The sacrament of friendship depends upon being safe to open your heart fully and know that it will be protected. Good friends are a tree of shelter in hard times, and a source of joy and growth. They are the ground out of which inner peace grows. Having a confidante that you can trust with your hopes and fears, who loves you, even after they have heard your darkest secrets, is a special grace. The ability to confide your secrets, not only reduces anxiety and stress, it also helps protect you against heart disease, strengthens immunity and aids the body's fight against cancer. For the entire week deepen your capacity for friendship by guarding against gossip in any form. Practice right speech. As your grandmother might have told you, if you don't have something nice to say about someone, say nothing at all. When another person begins to tell something they think you should know about another person let them know that you would rather not hear it. Every human being deserves the kindness and respect to be seen for who they are...rather than for who other people think they are.'

(Joan Borysenko, Inner Peace for Busy People)

'Learn from yesterday, live for today, hope for tomorrow.' Albert Einstein
