Reflection: Pope Francis Encyclical: Laudato Si

If the earth is to be protected, economic interests must not trump the common good. This means honouring the right of every person to share the world's natural resources, to work and have stable employment, to obtain affordable housing, and to use effective, affordable, and safe public transportation. Pope Francis directs his message to all people, but he especially calls on those in positions of power to exercise creative leadership in order to find integrative solutions to the immense ecological problems we are currently facing. Our "ecology" includes much more than our natural environment. It includes our social, economic, political, and cultural environments as well. An "integral ecology" recognizes and respects the interrelationship of society and nature. We must create social systems that mirror nature, where nothing is wasted and all is used for the common good. Pope Francis affirms that all human beings are integrally related to one another and to all of creation. We must honour, respect, and protect this complex web of relationships, so that each person and the earth can thrive. The environment and our economy are inextricably connected. Our rampant consumerism and individualism have not only made us profoundly unhappy, but they have also weakened our social bonds, and marginalized entire communities. They are destroying our environment and polluting our politics. We must also pay special attention to people living in poverty, for they are the ones who suffer the most from our unjust economic structures as well as from the pollution of our air, water, and soil. Pope Francis affirms the important and necessary role of government at all levels. We need political leaders who acknowledge the ecological crisis and who are willing to respond with creativity. In turn, citizens are responsible to pressure their leaders to set aside short-term thinking for the sake of long-term solutions. Legal frameworks, both national and international are required to ensure that nations fulfil their responsibility to protect their citizens and their natural resources. Every one of us has a role to play in transforming our social, economic, and political institutions. We are encouraged to hear the Pope's message that we can heal our broken relationships to one another and to the earth. We are called to put the Pope's message into action!
